THE PIONEERS OF MODERN RELIEF PITCHING
By Rob Noyce

With the irrevocable (but still regrettable) retirement of Mariano Rivera, we can look forward to his Hall of Fame induction in six years. Trevor Hoffman, who's got more career saves than anyone but Rivera, might be elected even before Rivera. If both make it, that will be seven Hall of Famers inducted largely on the strength of their relief work (with the qualifier added mostly because of Dennis Eckersley, who was a line starting pitcher for some years).

MY FAVORITE PLAYER: TED WILLIAMS
By Bill Nowlin

Ted Williams was my hero. I was born in 1945, grew up in Greater Boston and wasn't the only one who held Ted in such high esteem. For a teenage boy in the 1950s, what wasn't there to like about Ted Williams? He was one of the greatest hitters ever. He was a war hero. He raised money to help fight cancer in kids. And he was a rebel, refusing to wear a necktie to social events. He was his own man and he excelled at what he chose to take on. I had no interest in fishing, but I knew he was considered one of the best at that, too.

The National Pastime Museum Online Museum and Collection Management

Contact:
Private Collector

ELY provides collection management services for this private collection of over 25,000 rare, baseball related artifacts. In addition, we managed the original creation and launch of an online museum developed to share this amazing collection with the public. The content of the website continues to grow with weekly articles from well-known sports historians and writers as well as new artifacts and exhibitions. ELY continues to manage the online museum and its development.
